GENERAL GRANT.

The Christian Advocate says of ex President Grant:—

"He has commanded larger armies than ever Napoleon did; fought them before a more determined foe than ever confronted the imperial Guard; marched them through territories more difficult of campaigning from Italy, Germany, or Russia; kept up longer lines of communication than Napoleon ever attempted, and all with greater success. Bonaparte at last found his Waterloo, but Grant at Appomattox; Bonaparte the lonely Helena and the grave; Grant the chief magistracy of a great nation, and now a home in the affections of the people he has served. He retires to private life to enjoy its peace and quiet, not as to exile, but as to a place of cove ted rest. Think of Marlborough, or Turenne, or Wellington leaving their places of power and becoming simply citizens of a country they had done so much to save! Republics alone furnish such illustrations to history."

MRS. GRANT.

A letter written from Washington to the Cincinnati Commercial says of Mrs. Grant:—

"There is no woman I can at present remember who has so entirely fulfilled every duty required of her in the capacity of daughter, wife, mother and friend as Mrs. Grant, and I am glad that fewpens have been found base enough to assail a character so above reproach. The wife of the General who was the idol before whom in adoration bowed forty millions of people, the first lady in the land, spouse of the President, was as gentle, unassuming and gracious as when the helpmate of the poor man in St. Louis who was willing and glad to haul wood at $1.50 per day. Her womanly dignity has never failed her, and during all the years in which she has been so prominently before the public there has been in her act, no speech, no detract in the least from her perfections. I am honest in my opinions, and entirely unprejudiced. I have no favors to ask, no axes to grind, and am therefore entitled to credence in what I assert. No father ever had a more loving daughter than Mr. Dent; no husband has ever been blessed with a more unselfish, devoted wife; and no children loved by a mother whose virtues shone more conspicuous than hers. Her domestic affairs have been under her immediate supervision. Three fourths of her costumes have been made in the house; there has been every comfort necessary for the complete happiness of the family religiously furnished, but no extravagance tolerated, and that she has been to domestics a good mistress is proved by the fact of the same set having remained with her during those nine years.

HOMEMADE FUN.

Take a good sized potato with a smooth skin, cut nose, eyes, and mouth; twist curled hair into the shape of a wig and whiskers and moustache, and fasten on with pins; then make a hole for the foreinger to go into; this gives the head a throat. Wrap a bit of cloth, a handkerchief, or what not, round the thumb, arrange one corner of it around the thumb and tie other around the second finger. Then you have a little man with hands and arms, capable of bowing and moving his head. Make a screen; get four or five youngsters, behind it, each with his potato character, and as they say the words of the charade, burlesque or tragedy, let these potato men perform. It is capital fun, and beats Punch and Judy out of the field. Potato men have amiable dispositions. They are generally friendly, fond of shaking hands, embracing and nodding their heads cordially at each other. They also have a thoughtful way of rubbing their foreheads, that is very funny. Sometimes they fight we admit, but they don't fling each other all the time, as Punch and Judy do. Try them.

A THRILLING SCENE.

The following incident occurred during a general review of the Austrian cavalry some months ago:—

Not far from thirty thousand cavalry were in line. A little girl of not more than four years, standing in the front row of spectators, either from fright or some other cause, rushed out into the open field just as a squadron of hussars came sweeping around from the main body. They made the detour for the purpose of saluting the Empress, whose carriage was drawn up in that part of the parade ground. Down came the flying squadron, charging at a mad gallop—down directly upon the child. The mother was paralyzed, as were others, for there could be no rescue from the line of spectators. The Empress uttered a cry of horror, for the child's destruction seemed inevitable—and such terrible destruction—the tramping to death by a thousand iron hoofs. Directly under the feet of the horses was the little one—another instant must seal its doom—when a stalwart hussar who was in the front line, without slackening his speed or loosening his hold, threw himself over by the side of his horse's neck, seized and lifted the child, and placed it in safety upon his saddle bow; and this he did without changing his pace or breaking the correct alignment of the squadron. Ten thousand voices hailed with rapturous applause the gallant deed, and other thousands applauded when they knew. Two women were there who could only sob forth their gratitude in broken accents—the mother and the Empress. And a proud and happy moment it must have been for the hussar when his Emperor, taking from his own breast the richly enameled cross of the Order Maria Theresa, hung it upon the breast of his brave and gallant trooper.

WOOD CARVING FOR WOMEN.

The interest now awaking in decorative art is an indication of renewed progress. Heretofore we have been absorbed in mechanical rather than artistic advancement. We have invented much but adorned little, and in the art of household architecture and decoration we are an age behind the humblest European dwelling. The Swiss peasant carves his chalet into a miracle of beauty, and the influence of European decorative art was largely increased by the intermingling of trans-atlantic nations with us at the Centennial. Mr. Silvisburg says the future of wood carving should not lie in the nature of useless ornaments or commonplace toys, but apply its skill to the production of furniture and panelling. Such articles finished with care would find a market in all opulent towns. It is easy to see what the effect of this new art will be upon the lives of working-women. A few years since it was unknown in Cincinnati. Now 12 women support themselves by this work. Mr. Pitman, of the Cincinnati school of design, gave free tuition in this art, and awakened an enthusiasm for it. The outlay is merely nominal. The tools cost little. Any cabinet store furnishes material at small cost. An artistic ability to design, though desirable, is not indispensable in this art. It has the advantage of speedy results. In one term of lessons—about 20—the pupil begins to exhibit her power. The demand for this work will steadily increase and command high prices. From cornices and mouldings, from church, library and parlor furniture to cabinets, paper-holders, brackets and other ornaments, nothing can equal the artistic hand-carving. Now let the average woman take possession of this dainty handicraft, and not pass into the tiresome and lonely work of a teacher, when she has no inner capability for the work, or starve over a sewing machine, but seize the idea of a new and desirable world, and in a congenial means of self-support carve out, not decorations alone, but a solid, fair and beautiful success in life.—Indianapolis Journal.

CARL SCHURZ.

Carl Schurz has had a chequered career in the two hemispheres, in each of which he has spent one half of his forty-eight years of life. He was born in Prussia, March 2, 1829. Before he was twenty years old he was a red hot Republican, an editor of an insurrectionary journal. He fought in the defense of Rastadt, from which he escaped to Switzerland, on the surrender of the fortress. He returned secretly to Germany in 1850, and effected the escape from prison of his friend and compatriot, Gottfried Kinkel. Having spent a short time in England and France, he came to the United States in 1852. His first appearance in politics was as a Republican, in the Fremont campaign of 1856. He was a Major General of the Union Army in the late Civil War. He has been an editor, teacher, and lawyer, and he is now "the scholar in politics." He is also an orator of great power, and speaks with equal ease in German and English. No man in this generation has displayed more versatile and brilliant talents than Carl Schurz. He is the representative man of the German-American citizens, and they may well be proud of him.

THE PAINLESS DEATH.

In a recent holiday lecture at the Royal Institution, Prof. Tyndall, speaking of the painless death by electricity, remarked that Franklin was twice struck senseless by the shock. He afterward sent the discharge of two large jars through six robust men, who fell to the ground and got up again without knowing what happened, neither hearing nor feeling the discharge; and Priestly, too, who made many valuable contributions to electricity, received the charge of two jars, but did not feel it painful. Prof. Tyndall said this experience agreed with his own, that, in the theatre of the Royal Institution, and in the presence of an audience, he once received the discharge of a battery of 15 Leyden jars. Unlike Franklin's six men, he did not fall, but, like them, he felt nothing; he was simply extinguished for a sensible interval. This may be regarded as an experimental proof that people killed by lightning suffer no pain. Now, the measured velocity of electricity is many thousand times greater than the measured velocity of sensation in the nerves. Hence the electrical concussion reaches the centre of life without any possible announcement by the eye, ear, or sense of feeling. There is abundant evidence that death by a rifle ball traversing the brain is for the same reason entirely without consciousness or pain. A rifle ball, however, is a tortoise compared with the electric flash.

AN INDIAN DUEL.

A citizen of Sioux City who has spent much time among the upriver Indians, says it is amusing, as well as touching, to hear an Indian sing his death song.

Our informant was at Standing Rock a few months since, and one day he observed an unusual stir among the Indians. Soon two bucks came forth from different lodges, each with a gun in his hand. They walked out some little distance from the rest of the Indians and took posts, distant from each other about fifty yards. At a given signal they turned, raised their rifles to their faces and fired, when both fell, wounded, one fatally. They were immediately surrounded by friends, who made no particular effort to bind their wounds, but simply stood around talking among themselves, and gesticulating, while the wounded Indians as soon as they fell began the death song. There was little music in it. It was a sort of deep-down, guttural tone of voice, kept up for half a minute or so at a time, when it would cease, and the sufferers would in the interim make a confession of the evil deeds they had ever done. They would tell of the massacres in which they had been engaged, how many scalps they had wrung from the heads of white people; the number of ponies they had stolen; together with all sorts of important and unimportant evil doings in their lifetime. This accomplished, they were ready to give up the ghost.—Omaha Herald.

THE GRASSHOPPER COMMISSION.

The GAZETTE has already published the fact of the formation of a grasshopper commission by the general government, and the appropriation of $18,000 to pay the expenses of such commission. Immediately after receiving their commissions they met at Dr. Lawton's office, in Washington, and organized under the name of the "United States Entomological Commission." They at once proceeded to map out their work for the season as follows: St. Louis was selected head quarters, where the commissioners will meet previous to their final departure to the field for the summer, and where they will do most of their official business. It was then agreed that the area assigned to each commissioner, the present season, shall be as follows:

1. To Professor Riley—Missouri, Kansas, the southern half of Colorado and the region south, and Western Iowa.

2. To Dr. Thomas—Eastern Iowa, Minnesota, Southern Dakota, Nebraska, Northern Colorado, and Eastern Wyoming.

3. To Dr. Packard—Western Wyoming, Utah, Montana, Idaho, and the Pacific Coast.

4. To Dr. Packard and Professor Riley jointly—The regions of British America immediately north of Dakota and Montana.

Each one is expected to visit the section assigned to him as soon as possible for the purpose of making observations, and to arrange for careful observations by local observers, for the collection of all available data upon the subject, and instituting such experiments, investigations, etc., as are deemed important.

The subject matters of the investigation are divided among the commissioners as follows:

1. To Professor Riley—Biology, insect enemies and parasites; and mechanical devices for destruction of these insects.

2. To Dr. Thomas—Geographical distribution; enemies other than insect enemies; and the agricultural bearings of the subject.

3. To Dr. Packard—Anatomy and embryology.

4. To Drs. Packard and Thomas, jointly—The meteorological bearings of the subject.

5. The remedial measures and migrations are to be considered by all the Commissioners, and it is expected each will pay more or less attention to all these matters.

There will probably be issued by the Commissioners at an early day a bulletin giving briefly an account of the habits and remedies, so far as at present known, for general distribution. This will probably be followed at regular intervals by other bulletins whenever the facts ascertained are deemed to be of a nature necessary to be made known immediately.

At a very early day a circular will be prepared, mentioning the points on which information is desired. A large number will be published, and widely distributed.

It is the determination of the commission to confine its operations more particularly to the practical bearings of the subject, with a view to ascertain all the possible remedies against these destructive insects. A desire for a display of entomological knowledge will be made subservient to the great object for which the appropriation was made, to wit: What can be done to counteract these insects?

This appointment gives general satisfaction, and it is believed what is possible to be done by scientific investigation will be done by this commission.

"It has become the fashion to assign the use of the tablecloth as the reason why we have this meat served on a bare table."

WINNING WORDS.

The following are the closing utterances of Col. Robert Ingersoll's recent speech in New York City:—

"We have fought and hated enough. Our country is prostrate. Labor is in rags. Energy has empty hands. In the safe of Prudence money lies locked by the key of Fear. Confidence is what we need—confidence in each other, confidence in our institutions, in our form of government, in the great future; confidence in law, confidence in liberty, in progress, and in the grand destiny of the great republic. I extend to you each and all the olive branch of peace. Fellow-citizens of the South, I beseech you to take it. By the memory of those who died for naught, by the charred remains of your remembered homes. By the ashes of your statesmen, dead for the sake of your sons and daughters and their children yet to be, I implore you to take it with loving and with loyal hands. It will cultivate your wasted fields, it will fill your coffers with gold; it will educate your children; it will swell the sails of your commerce; it will cause the roses of joy to clamber and to climb over the broken cannon of war; it will flood the cabins of the freedmen with light, and clothe the weak in more than a coat of mail, and wrap the poor and lowly in measureless content. Take it; the North will forgive if the South will forget. Take it; the negro will wipe from the tablet of memory the strokes and scars of two hundred years, and blur with happy tears the record of his wrongs. Take it, it will unite our nation, it will make us brothers once again. Take it, and justice will sit in our courts under the outspread white wings of peace. Take it, and the brain and hand of the future will be free. Take it, it will bud and blossom in your hands and fill your land with fragrance and with joy. Take it, and we have passed the midnight of our political history, and the star of hope heralds again the rising sun."

THE MOUNTAIN MEADOW MASSACRE.

Knowing that Mrs. Cates, of this county, was one of the 17 children spared at the time of the terrible massacre at Mountain Meadow, in 1857, we sent her a request to come to town with her husband, that we might get her statement of this fiendish butchery from her own lips. She accordingly complied, and we end away to give it in her own language as near as possible.

"My name is Nancy Sophronia. I am the daughter of Peter Huff, my mother's maiden name was Sabina Brown, daughter of Alexander Brown, of Tennessee. I was born in Benton County, Arkansas, in 1853. My father started to move from that county in the spring of 1857, with the old fatal train bound for California. I was then a little past four years old. I can recollect my father and mother very well, as well as many little incidents that occurred about that time, our travels on the road, etc. I recollect passing through Salt Lake City, and passing through other places, and I thought we were in a small transit. One morning before day I was woke up by firing of guns, and learned that our camp had been attacked, as we supposed, by Indians; some of the men folks were wounded. The men dug a ditch around our camp and fortified the best they could, the women and children got out in the ditch and were comparatively out of danger. The fighting went on at intervals for six days, when, failing to drive our men from their fortification, the attacking party went off. Soon afterward a party that we thought to be friends came with a white flag, and said they would protect us; they said they were our friends, and if we would come out and leave what we had, they would take us to Cedar City where we would be safe, and they would protect us and see that none of us were hurt. Our people agreed to this and it started out men, women and children, and left everything we had behind us. We had gone but a short distance from the wagons after we had been in the fortification, to a place where tall sage brush was growing on both sides of the road, and as we were passing through this place we found we were surrounded, as men had hid in it and began firing among us, and then rushed upon us from both sides and killed everybody they came to. Capt. Boggs had one arm broken when he was shot down, and fell dead. I saw my mother shot in the forehead and fall. The women and children screamed and clung together, some of the young women begged the assassins after they had run out to us and took them, but they had no mercy on them, but shot their guns and beating out their brains. Some of the murderers were white men and some supposed were Indians from their dress. At the close of the massacre there were 18 children, the youngest one girl, some ten or twelve years old, they said was too big and could not be kept alive, leaving 17. A man I saw was introduced to me named John Willis, had charge of the children were taken and carried me to his house next day to live with him. He lived at Cedar City, and was a Mormon. He kept me there that winter, in the spring he moved to a place called Toquerville. I lived there about a year, until Dr. Forney had the children gathered up and carried us to Salt Lake City, where we were in Salt Lake City, and remained two months; from there we came back to the States. I know that the most of those who did the killing were white men. I saw Mormons got all the plunder. I saw many of the things afterward. John Willis had some family bed clothes and clothing and other things that I recognized as having belonged to my mother; when I claimed the things he told me, told a lie and tried to make me believe it was the Indians that killed my people, but I knew better, he was there and helped killing them, killing our folks and knew many things that they carried off that I saw in their possession afterwards. I saw Willis during the massacre; he carried me off from the spot; I could not be mistaken, living with him made me know him beyond a doubt. I saw them shot the girl after we were gathered. I had a sister that was nearly grown and two brothers that they killed; I was the youngest child of our family, the only one that was spared. They kept the children all separated whilst we remained with them. The scenes and incidents of the massacre were so terrible that they were indelibly stamped on my mind, notwithstanding I was so young at the time."

Thus we have an account from an eye witness of one of the most foul and inhuman massacres on the world's record. For years this blot has remained, with but little if any effort to visit justice upon the heartless villains. Our people were murdered by the wholesale, and the murderers have gone scot free. The bloody assassins have made free to use the family plunder and relics in presence of the orphan children, that knew their mothers' clothing, and if they ventured to say a word were called liars and threatened with death; all this done in the face and on the soil of a powerful nation, and still goes unavenged. The blood of these slaughtered victims calls for justice. Besides hanging the murderers these children should receive something from the national treasury. The train was the richest in property and cash that ever attempted to pass over the overland route; the Mormons got all, the children that survived are now poor and hard pressed, and should be remembered. Money cannot compensate them for the loss of father, mother, brothers and sisters, but it can indemnify them partially for their loss of property, and show to them that they have the sympathy of the nation. It is a grand farce to try these Mormon "Latter Day Saints," the impostors and damnation rather, by a Mormon jury. We would not persecute them for their religious faith, but prosecute them for murder and robbery, until the whole hot-bed of corruption is lancet in the place from which it emanated.—Dardanelle (Ark.) Independent.

HOW DANIEL BOONE DIED.

As he lived, so he died, with his gun in his hand. We are informed by a gentleman direct from Boone's, on the Missouri, that early in last month Colonel Daniel Boone rode to a deer lick, and seated himself within a blind raised to conceal him from the game. That while sitting thus concealed, with his old trusty rifle in his hand, pointed toward the lick, the muzzle resting on a log, his foot to the breech of the gun, his rifle cocked, his finger on the trigger, one eye shut, the other looking the barrel through the sight—in this position, without a struggle or motion, and of course without pain, he breathed out his life so gently, that when he was found next day by his friends, although stiff and cold, he looked as if alive, with his gun in hand just in the act of firing. It is not altogether certain if a buck had come into range of his gun, which had been the death of thousands, but it might have intuitively followed its old employer's mind and discharged itself. The hypothesis being novel, we leave the solution to the curious.—Paris (Ky.) Citizen, 1869.

THE CAMPHOR TREE.

One of the most useful and magnificent productions of the vegetable kingdom that enriches China, and more particularly the provinces of Kiangsi and Canton, is the camph tree. This tree, as it flourishes, which is on the banks of the rivers, was in several places found by Lord Amherst's embassy above five feet high, with a stem twenty feet in circumference. The Chinese them cut down when it sometimes attains the height of more than three hundred feet, and more particularly the extended arms of twenty men could embrace. Camphor is obtained from the branches by steeping them, with water for two or three days, and then boiling them till the gum is thrown up in a white scum, adheres to a stick which is used constantly stirring the branches. The gum is poured into a glazed vessel, where it congeals in few hours.

I have seen the Chinese take a quantity of the crude material, which they lay at the bottom of a copper, and then place a layer of camphor, and on another layer of earth, and so on until the vessel is nearly filled, the last or topmost layer being of earth. They cover it with a close cover of a plant called [illegible] which seems to be a species of [illegible] and make a fire by [illegible] the action of a gentle heat for a length of time, and then cool [illegible]. Forty two dromedaries passed through San Bernardino, Cal., a few days ago, en route for Arizona. They are to be used for transporting mining and prospecting in the mines of that Territory. It is the enterprise of some Frenchmen.

There is a story of two Scotch lads who knew little of grammar and natural history but were familiar with King James' Bible and with the winged heads that were for cherubs in painting and sculpture. Going out a-gunning together, one of them shot a bird and the other ran to secure the trophy. Coming near where it had fallen, he found a white owl sitting quietly on the grass and presented to his view only a head with staring eyes and a pair of wings attached. Instantly he shouted in dismay: "Weel, I'm for it now, Jock; we've shot a cherubim."

As long ago as 1857 a company in the West began the manufacture of building paper, and now it has large works that turn out 16 tons per day. The paper thus manufactured is a thick, hard pasteboard, made in rolls of 25 to 100 pounds each, and usually 32 inches wide. While it is being made it is subjected to an enormous pressure, which compresses the fibres into a solid mass. The sheet becomes absolutely air tight, and as paper is a non conductor of heat it resists both the action of heat and cold. A building lined with it resists the entrance of heat in summer and cold in winter. In case of fire the paper sheets do not burn so easily as wood on account of their hard compactness. This queer building material has been tried in warm and cold climates, and found to work admirably in all conditions and circumstances.

THE ELECTION

On the election on Monday resulted in a complete revolution of the city government in the hands of the Prohibitionists. It is true the license people succeeded by very questionable means in electing their candidate in the first ward, and also elected a license man from the fourth ward, which latter they held last year. Thus they have gained one Alderman over last year, but they are no better off practically, than they were with only Mr. Brown in the Council, for the opposition have the Mayor and two Aldermen. The Council now stands: Mayor Wagner, Aldermen Rogers, from the second ward, Albertson Barker from the third ward, prohibitionists, Alderman Bradbury from the first ward, and Aldermen Morey from the fourth ward, license. Independent on the question of the latter will generally vote in favor of licensing and granting licenses to parties of good moral character upon the payment of the license fee, as a revenue measure, and the enforcement of the requirements. BENDER FAMILY

A [illegible] in Southern Kansas, Arkansas [illegible] detectives passed through Southern Kansas on route to Kansas with the suspects, Bender family [illegible] in Crawford County [illegible] went under the name of Kent. They were sought for by a Mr. Beard, Special Agent of the Governor of Kansas, who discovered the bodies of the murdered York and [illegible] near Fort Scott in Kansas in 1873. He followed the family down the Arkansas River and [illegible] Boat to Pierce City, Missouri, [illegible] to Fayetteville, Arkansas. Beard proceeded to Kansas and the Governor offered a reward of $1,500 and a requisition [illegible] Kate Bender alias John Bender, Mrs. Kate Bender alias Mrs. Kate Kenter alias Mrs. Bender, and Philip Kenter alias John Bender, [illegible] The arrests were made quietly by the Sheriff, the only resistance being by Kate, who drew a shovel on the officers, and attempted to get a club, but was prevented from doing any harm. The whole party deny that they are the Benders, but the circumstances are so strong that everyone in the vicinity where the arrests were made believe they are the real Bender family. Kenter has been a good citizen, but [illegible] under suspicion ever since his residence in the county. He came into the county on foot like all the family, one at a time, but the old man soon commenced buying farms and agricultural implements, always having plenty of money to pay his way.

SOUND TALK.

The New England conference of the Methodist Church opened Thursday, in Boston, and 111 of the 225 members were present. Resolutions on the Southern question were presented by Rev. W. F. Mallalieu, D. D., of Boston, and upon being read they were received with great applause, and by a vote of the conference they were referred to a special committee of five to be appointed by the chairman. The preamble to the resolutions reviewed the lingering effects of slavery, and the two first resolutions are in substance as follows:

Resolved, That we are alarmed and filled with apprehensions for the future when we contemplate the practical safe one of the great political parties of the Republic by two politicians of that party who have held and now hold very intimate relations to the President, thus sacrificing principle and party and righteousness for the sake of temporary success.

Resolved, That we protest most earnestly against the action of the new administration in making terms with the chief kuklux and instigator of the Hamburg massacre, M. C. Butler, and still more earnestly do we protest against the official recognition by the administration of that arch enemy of the Republic, who long since ought to have been hung for treason, Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, and who by threats and intimidation under the very roof of the White House, as well as on platforms and in other public places, defies the power of the Government and defies the first edict in compliance with his traitorous and wicked usurpation.

ANCIENT RUINS ON THE ANIMAS.

Professor Hayden has given Southwestern Colorado a new claim to advertisement in discovering to a great degree and giving exact information in regard to the ancient ruins in the section in Southeastern Utah. The stories told about them are very interesting, and the Scientific Press, of San Francisco, has taken upon itself the task of furnishing a full description, which is illustrated. A correspondent of the Chicago Chieftain sends a brief account to that paper which we reproduce. His article is as follows:

The ancient ruins which are scattered all over this country are some of the greatest unwritten pages of the world's history. This fertile valley has been densely populated and highly cultivated by an enlightened race of people centuries ago, and the ruins of the houses, forts, towns, fortifications, cities, pottery ware, drawings, hieroglyphic writings, etc., go to show what they have been many arts cultivated in those days, which are now entirely lost to the human race. Their houses have been built of most every kind of rocks, from small boulders to the finest sandstone. The finest of these ruins, and the most perfect, are located fifteen miles up the Animas River, or about thirty five miles below Animas City, in a large valley fifteen miles long by seven miles wide, on the west side of the river. This valley has been covered with buildings of every size, the two largest ones being [illegible] feet, and are about 3 feet apart. They are built of small sandstones laid in adobe mud, the outside walls being four feet, and the inside walls from one and a half to three feet. In the lower story port holes a foot square have been built for defense. There are rooms now left and walls for about four stories high still standing. About the second story, on the west side, there has been a balcony along the entire length of the building. No signs of a door are visible in the outer walls and the ingress must have been from the top, in the inside there being passages from room to room. Most of them are small, from 8x10 to 12x14 feet, the doors being 2x4 feet. The arches over the doors and port holes are made of small cedar poles two inches wide, placed across, on which the masonry is placed. The sleepers supporting the floors are of cedar, about eight inches through and from twenty to fifty feet long and about three feet apart. A layer of small round poles is then placed across the sleepers, then a layer of finely split cedar sticks, then about three inches of earth, then a layer of cedar bark, then another layer of earth, then a carpet of some fine of course grass, which forms the floors. The rooms that have been protected from exposure are white washed, and ornamented by drawings and writings. In one of these rooms the impression of a human corpse in whitewash, on a post, is as plain as if it had been done only a few days ago. In another room there are drawings of tarantulas, centipedes, horses and men. One room in the eastern portion is quite a curiosity, it being perfectly round, and must have been used for a [illegible]. It is about twenty feet across. In some of these rooms have been found human bones, bones of sheep, corn cobs, gourds, rawhides, and all colors and varieties of pottery ware. These two large buildings are exactly the same in every respects. Portions of the building plainly show that it has been destroyed by fire, the timbers being burned off and the roofs caving in, leaving the lower rooms entirely protected. The rock these buildings have been built of must have been brought a long way, as nothing to compare with it can be found within twenty miles. As the timber used is cedar, and has at least been brought twenty five miles. Old cities and roads are to be seen in every direction.

In conversation with the Navajos in regard to these ruins, they say their forefathers came there five old men's ages ago (500 years) and these ruins were here, and the same then as now, and that they have no record of it whatever.

The only thing to show its age is a date in one of the rooms just opened, which took two men one day to get into, and found on the wall the date 1225.

A furnished house is offered for rent, two and a half miles from the city. The use of a light spring wagon goes with the rent of the premises. There is good water, ample pasture, and abundance of land for cultivation.

HOW THE HOUSE HAS ORGANIZED, AND MAY AGAIN.

It is reported that Mr. Adams, Clerk of the House of Representatives at Washington, has placed the name of Thos. M. Patterson on the roll of the House for the 45th Congress, instead of Judge Belford, as representative from Colorado. The following from the New York Tribune is pertinent:—

The possibility that Clerk Adams may assume extraordinary powers in making up the roll of the next House brings the following interesting bit of history to the recollection of the Washington correspondent of the Boston Journal: "In 1839 Hugh A. Garland, the clerk of the former House, undertook to set himself up as one having authority and to decide that in a contested case he would not call the names of either party. An angry and disorderly debate ensued and was continued several days, when Representative John Quincy Adams insisted on being heard. 'It was not my intention,' said Mr. Adams, 'to take any part in these extraordinary proceedings. I had hoped that this House would succeed in organizing itself, that a Speaker and Clerk would be elected, and that the ordinary business of legislation would be allowed to commence. This is not the time nor the place to discuss the conflicting claims of the contesting claimants for seats; but why do we thus degrade ourselves, our constituents and the country? We do not, cannot organize; and why? Because the Clerk of this House, the mere Clerk, whom we create, whom we employ, and whose existence depends on our will, usurps the throne and sets us, the vicegerents of the whole American people, at defiance and hoots us in contempt. And what is this Clerk? Is he to control the destinies of sixteen millions of freemen? Is he to suspend by his mere negative the functions of government, and put an end to this Congress? He refuses to call the names which should be on the roll. It is in your power to compel him to call it if he will not do it voluntarily.' Here Mr. Adams was interrupted by a statement from a Democratic representative that Mr. Garland would resign rather than call the vote of New Jersey. This roused the old man elephant, whose rage became [illegible] as he said: 'We shall see him resign, and we may possibly discover some way by which we can get along without the aid of his powerful talent, learning and genius. If we cannot organize in any other way—if this Clerk will not consent to our discharging the trusts confided to us by our constituents—then let us imitate the example of Virginia in the house of Burgesses, which, when Dinwiddie ordered it to disperse, refused to obey the insulting mandate.' Mr. Adams then submitted a motion requiring the acting Clerk to call the roll of all having certificates. Mr. Clerk Garland refused to entertain the motion. 'Then,' exclaimed Mr. Adams, 'I will put the motion myself.' Representative Barnwell Rhett here sprang to the floor and moved that Mr. John Quincy Adams, of Massachusetts, should take the Speaker's chair and preside until the House should be constitutionally organized, but the question and vote were not carried. Mr. Adams took the chair and Mr. Clerk Garland refused to state one since." Should Clerk Adams endeavor to make a "bigger man" of himself, he may find his game blocked by a second John Quincy Adams.

SLATE FINANCES.

From the quarterly report of our State Treasurer, which was published in yesterday's issue of the News, it will be seen that the collections of taxes for the year 1876, have been very small up to the first of January. This, however, is easily accounted for by the hard times we have been experiencing, and which have caused a large majority of taxpayers to delay the payment of taxes until forced to do so to avoid penalty and interest for delinquency. Comparatively few taxes are paid prior to January, but after that time they begin to flow in freely, and during the next few months collections will doubtless improve materially. The last General Assembly enacted a law requiring county treasurers to pay over for the State purposes, on or before the tenth of each month, and not as heretofore semi annually. This law takes effect the present month, and in probability the next report of the State Treasurer will show that a very large portion of the levy of 1876, will have been collected and a corresponding amount of the indebtedness of the State for that year liquidated. The same provision will enable a ready calculation of the debt incurred for each succeeding year, as soon as the time for collecting commences, and it is safe to predict that the entire indebtedness of the State, including that of the current year, will be paid by the first of June or July, 1878. The present report shows the payment of $162,271.63 of State warrants, of which $7,945 07 were received on account of taxes and $6,326.56 paid in cash. There is still some $50,000 due on the levy of 1876, a considerable part of which will find its way into the treasury, under the operation of the new law, between the tenth and twentieth of this month, the rest following in succeeding months until all is paid that can be collected. This will cance the outstanding warrants of last year and probably some few of later date, the warrants being paid in the order of their registry. This system of monthly collections from county treasurers will save the State a good deal of interest, as it will enable the State Treasurer to take up his warrants much sooner than if he were compelled to wait for the July and January settlements. Another good feature of the new law is that it requires the State levy to be paid in cash exclusively, and county treasurers can have no excuse for failure to remit promptly.—Denver News.

GOOD WORDS.

The Colorado Farmer commends the gamblers, and speaks as follows in regard to the new law in Denver: "Now we have a new council, and we ask them to take effective steps to suppress this open, public, licensed shame. In the name of the youth of our city we ask it; in the name of scores of helpless families whose bread is wasted in these hell holes, we ask our council to pass laws which, if they do not do away with the evil, will at least drive it to more secluded haunts, compel the proprietors of these glittering hells to exclude boys and strippings that now can be seen any day in these dens."

SUMMER TRAVEL TO COLORADO.

A Topeka dispatch gives the following concerning the new time card on the Banana Line: "The long and animated contest on the part of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad to secure direct connection at Pueblo for Denver, has culminated in a fast express over that road, the new time table calling for the fastest time ever made west of Kansas City. The new order of things goes into effect on Sunday next, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe train leaving Kansas City at 11:30 a. m., arriving at Pueblo at 3 p. m. the next day, making direct connection, Denver is reached at 8 p. m. Returning the same direct connection is made. An additional train will be put on for the accommodation of the immense tide of immigration pouring into the southwest, this train leaving Kansas City at night and making the run through the Arkansas valley by day gray."—Denver News.

ENTERPRISE.

On Monday the municipal election occurred, and within thirty minutes after the votes were counted the GAZETTE had the following extra on the streets. It shows the votes given for each candidate on the two different tickets in each ward, the majority for the successful candidate in each ward, the total vote cast for officers—other than Aldermen—in all the wards, and the total majority of such officers. It only remains to explain that the first name given for each office in every case was the candidate on the prohibition ticket, and the second name the candidate on the license ticket. The extras were snapped up as fast as a press running at the rate of 1,200 impressions per hour could turn them out:—

THE ELECTION.

The Election here to-day was quiet and orderly, nothing occurring to mar the harmony of the proceedings. Voting began early, and there was earnest work on the part of candidates on both tickets, though good humor prevailed in all the bantering that was indulged in on each side. This is as it should be, for candidates and voters are friends and neighbors, with a community of interests, but with a difference of opinions regarding questions of political economy and public morals. Good men were nominated on both tickets for the various offices, and the defeated candidates owe their defeat to the principles they represented, and not to the fact that they are unpopular with their fellow-citizens.

The polls were closed at 6 o'clock and the count was completed in all the wards by 7:30.

ROUND ABOUT THE STATE.

Mr. Vathias Custer has taken charge of the Rosita Index.

Denver elected six aldermen Monday, all Republicans but Moss, a German from the first ward.

The Enterprise says that Trinidad is growing faster than any other town in the State, east of the mountains.

The grand jury at Leadville indicted a man named R. C. Allison, for killing Charles Graber at Weston, Lake County.

The Chieftain is informed that the Denver & Rio Grande Railway Company has purchased the iron of the extension to Fort Garland.

The Greeley Tribune reports that the people for ten miles down the Platte are raising large crops of wheat, without irrigation.

People in Colorado should have money to burn for good mining properties, if the eastern journals that come to this Territory find our mines in order for inspection.

The Mayor of Denver has at last written a moving lecture against the practice of throwing dead horses into the Platte. He says that he has discovered that the wood work of the city is decomposed at an early day.

A fire broke out last Saturday morning in a building occupied in the Rocky Mountain News office, Denver, and the building was totally consumed. Loss $[illegible]

The grand jury of Las Animas County met on the 2d inst., and brought in a number of indictments. Among the indictments were one against Thomas Cooper, for the murder of Charles Gardner, at Trinidad, and one against Thomas Hogan, for the murder of Thomas Ryan, at Trinidad. The Court adjourned on the 3d inst., after a session of two days.

Good lodes have been found in the Ute District, Ouray County, and some fine mines in other parts of the district.

FARMING IN COLORADO.

The locust plague can no longer be considered a scourge in Colorado. Last year large crops of small grain were raised generally, though it was a locust year. The farmers do not doubt but the same may be done this year, and every year, and are proving their faith by their works. In locust seasons, the flying swarms crop down the fields from the east late in summer or early in autumn, damaging only corn and late crops. But corn and late crops are not what the country is adapted to, but there never was a region better adapted to early sown wheat, oats, and barley.

The insects lay their eggs most in the sandy, waste places, and the following spring these hatch in myriads, but can be kept from the gardens and grain fields by the citizens, into which coal oil is sometimes dropped, forming a scum on the water that kills all that attempt to cross. They soon get wings and fly away, leaving scarce a trace of damage behind. It should be observed that the locust is not a permanent plague in this country, more than in Egypt or the wheat regions of Russia.

The hoppers came in 1864 or 1865, from four to a few years, and disappeared, appearing again in 1874, and have remained since, long enough for the farmers to gain the experience which enables them to guard against their depredations by the use of irrigating ditches, in which respect this State has an advantage over the other Northwestern States and Territories.

The compensations of the system of irrigation offset its disadvantages, and more than offset them. During winter, great beds of snow lie on the higher mountains. These dissolve most in the early day, the first bringing down a wave from the hills, as the cloud from the water. The Nile at the time rises in many overflows, and precisely the same character. To a nation to the south would be fatal. Nor is it entirely the case of irrigation so great as is generally supposed. It is easier to lead ditches from the river to intercept it than to bring it down on the ground. So it is easier to drive a canal for water on to a farm than to run it on in carts. The ditches show and runs the way into to start crops, season by season, and some years the crop is perfected by natural rains, but farmers have come to depend on irrigation after the grounds were [illegible]. Irrigation is especially advantageous in gardening. By its strawberry vines the same fruit may be set in near a long time. Again, may be have cost much labor, may run over gardens and beds destroying many young vines.

As to storms, to water, grasshoppers are subject, rain, tornadoes, the cutworm, army worm, the rust, this country is free to none of these except [illegible] to none of those except [illegible] New York or other states. In dry city, [illegible] mulch straw, and [illegible] the grower be sure of an annual crop. It may miss a crop, [illegible] some other state, but not occur in [illegible] to the three grain drings. The soil is wonderfully better than we [illegible] to wheat. This is of such a character, that wheat, the ingredients that make wheat. Where land has been sown successively to wheat since the first settlement of the country, it is now to sign of exhausting fertility. [illegible] more cost [illegible] giving the draft made [illegible] sources to the south-west [illegible] crops of wheat. Sixty bushels [illegible] wheat are not rare. [illegible] many acres exceed forty bushels to the acre. [illegible] twenty bushels to the acre [illegible] is large from a [illegible] acre and [illegible] mining [illegible] the [illegible] grain [illegible] more from Kansas.

This is a mistake that the Colorado crops are not driving the grasshoppers out of the country. It is true that the loss of some crops by the locust before it was known how to keep them off and the disadvantages incident to beginning in a new country, worse some discouragement at first, but in the time the settlers have been trying root, not by experience only, but in houses, ditches, irrigating ditches and have now begun to realize on their investments and labor, and have become attached to the country that they could not by no means change it for any other under the sun. And there is room for more colonies, nor a better chance in the world for making new happy and prosperous homes. Emigrants of homesteads may yet be taken on the entire lines between the Platte and Big Thompson creeks, where a colony could unite to construct a ditch canal from the Big Thompson that, with laterals, would water a scope of land capable of producing a million bushels of wheat yearly. A region never was and whose advantages better or irrigation or whose country was more inviting to improvement. It has an advantage over prairie soil in that it is easily worked on the first time, and will raise as good a crop as ever the first year of its cultivation. This is important to settlers in immediate need of returns for the labor of their hands. In the settled parts of the state lands improved and unimproved, but provided with ditches and water, can be bought at reasonable rates, considering the income that can be realized from the same. Lands yielding twenty bushels of wheat per acre, that is $20, at the present price. Deduct the cost of raising crop, and it leaves a net profit equal to the price per acre of land. Land can now be bought of those who have got beyond and of those who are ever rest ess to move on.—Boulder News.

The buildings of the Pennsylvania smelter are approaching completion. Perhaps five or six feet of the smokestack remains to be added. The engine and boilers are in place. The pans, settlers, and a portion of one evaporator are on the ground. The two assay furnaces are set up and in working order, ready to make ten assays at a time. One battery of five stamps is nearly finished. The building has room for ten stamps. The machinery is very substantial and first-class in every respect.—Rosita Index.

"Every farmer should give his sons two or three square rods of ground well prepared, with the avails of which they may buy it. Every mechanic should put a receiving box in some conspicuous place in the house, to catch the stray pennies for the like purpose."

Lay it upon your table by the side of the Bible—it is a better expounder than many which claim to be expounders.

It is a great labor saver—it has saved its time enough in one year's use to pay for itself, and that must be deemed good property which will clear itself once a year.
